Choosing the right Egyptian cotton sheets is very important, we all like very different things, and our bedding requirements are no exception. With a huge amount of choice available how do you know what is the right option? Some of the most popular questions we are asked are as follows: What is Thread Count? All luxurious Egyptian cotton linens, duvet covers and pillowcases have thread counts, so the tissues make the cotton fabrics we use to make bed linen. Cotton threads are woven together in a cross cross pattern and a wire count is given when the threads are hung together horizontally on the weft and vertically on the warp in a given square inch. So if the fabric is woven with a 300 thread count then the fabric has been woven together over 300 times in the square inch of linen. In general, the higher the thread counts the better and softer that bed linen becomes as you need finer yarn in principle to create even higher thread count. Egyptian cotton sheets use a higher degree of cotton than have long staple fibers that are stronger than standard cotton yarn that allows them to be spun even finer creating more lavish fabrics. What is Percale Cotton Weave? Percale fabrics are an industry minimum standard for weaving, this is where the fabric has a thread count of not less than 200 threads per square inch. Percale does not mean that the bed linen is no longer special or has been treated in any way other than standard cotton sheets, but only ensures that you get a minimum standard of quality and thread quantity when buying cotton sheets. Most Egyptian cotton percale bedding is also combed for extra softness, this is a process that removes more impurities carding which is a process used in much cheaper bedding. What is Sateen Cotton Weave? Luxury Egyptian cotton sateen bedding is more and more popular as many customers prefer the luxurious effect when the sheets sparkle when placed on the bed. Sateen is a process that makes cotton soft and even more luxurious by placing more cotton on the surface and creating a satin that shine effect. You can get cotton sateen in many fabrics, but we would recommend that you choose Pima or Egyptian cotton linen as they are much more robust and will last for many years and still look as good as the day you removed them from the packaging. Advantages of buying Egyptian cotton linens A lot is said about the benefits of buying the best luxury Egyptian cotton linen you can afford as you usually get what you pay for. Cotton sfabrics from Egypt will last longer as they have been treated with mercerising and sanforsation techniques that ensure that the drug does not pill or shrink when washing. Egyptian cotton is more absorbent than other fabrics, which helps absorb moisture from the body that keeps you cooler during the warmer months. Natural cotton bedding is also excellent when helping with allergies as they did not lint, making them ideal for allergy sufferers. Egyptian cotton is naturally breathable and easy to use and is the ideal choice for your new bedding. Then we discuss some tips to find the best sheets. AuthenticityUldigvis it is not uncommon for suppliers to mislabel bedding such as Egyptian cotton. In fact, studies have found that as many as 90 percent of premium cotton bedding products are mislabeled. Another study determined as many as 80 percent of fabric codes labeled as pure Egyptian cotton were actually made from cotton blends. Price point is a good indicator of Egyptian cotton authenticity. Real Egyptian sheets are quite expensive, and some cost upwards of $500. Sheet sets labeled Egyptian cotton with a lower price tag may be too good to be true. Certifications can also be useful. The 100% Egyptian cotton certification from the Cotton Egypt Association is considered the gold star. Brands that openly display this id on their website most likely sell authentic Egyptian cotton. In addition, take a closer look at these should contain a complete overview of all Used. When you buy online, request a photo of the tags if they are not available on the product page. Be sure to buy sheets from a trusted manufacturer that offers a solid return policy and/or warranty on their sheets. A reputable supplier will have confidence in the durability and comfort of real Egyptian cotton sheets. Wire countWire is a critical concern. Some Egyptian cotton sheets notice artificially inflating the thread count by counting each thread of a yarn fiber, as we mentioned above. Any wire counts above 600-800 should be thoroughly examined to ensure that the count is accurate and not an exaggeration. Some brands produce Egyptian cotton sheets with a very high thread-count. But many brands with high thread count playing marketing games with their terminology. Soft sheet sets with lower wire counts are widely available - and for many slackers, the difference between high and low wire counts is somewhat negotiable. For Egyptian cotton sheets, the optimal thread counts is 400-700; the lower thread count (200-300) can also be very comfortable if the yarn is single layer and it is finely made. WeaveCotton fibers are woven together to make the fabric. There are four common weaves for Egyptian cotton sheets. The weave of sheets determines the feeling and softness, as well as durability since some weaves can loosen over time or break yarn strands. These four tissues are described below: Percale: This common weave has a thread above and a thread below in a symmetrical pattern. These sheets have a sharp feel and a matte finish. They are also very durable. Sateen: This weave is three over and one below in pattern resulting in a heavier and smoother feel fabric. It is softer, but can pill faster than percale. Pinpoint: These tissues are made with two threads above and one thread underneath. Pinpoint has greater durability, but it doesn't feel very soft. Many compare it to the feeling of dress shirt fabric. Twill: This weave has an offset pattern with different wire counts over and below, resulting in a diagonal thread pattern. Twill is soft, fuzzy and warm. Color or pattern Many high-quality Egyptian cotton sheets are available in a limited color scheme. Traditional colors for Egyptian cotton are white and off-white or gray, and few brands offer patterned sheets. Most brands offer a paler palette of neutrals. Since good quality Egyptian cotton sheets should last longer than a duvet or duvet, sticking with neutrals is a good shopping strategy. Those who seek richer colors to match their bedroom décor may prefer mercerized cotton, since this fabric keeps dye with deeper colors and resists fading in the sink. Egyptian cotton sheets can be costly, so invest in a timeless style choice rather than a trend. Other considerationsIn addition, here are two more considerations for first time Egyptian cotton shoppers. Organically grown: Egyptian cotton may be organic or not. Organic cotton is grown with non-GMO seeds and no synthetic The agricultural process for organic is low impact on the environment. There are no toxic or persistent pesticides and fertilizers used, so it is a healthier product. Egyptian cotton sheets are expensive already, organic certifications drive up the price point even further. However, shoppers with sensitivity or health concerns - as well as eco-conscious individuals - may find organic Egyptian cotton is worth the extra money. Return policy/warranty: There is a difference between a sleep test, return policy and warranty. A sleep study allows customers to sleep on the sheets for a certain period of time to ensure they work well. Some return policies allow customers to sleep on the sheets and return if they are not satisfied. Other marks only accept returns if the sheets are not used. Guarantees are different and are related to defects in the products such as seam falling apart or other quality issues. Guarantees are not about performance or satisfaction. Egyptian cotton linens may or may not come with a warranty, but in most cases the warranty coverage will not exceed five years. Years.
